Refugees can play a vital role in resolving displacement by:

- Advocating for their rights. Refugees need to be able to speak up for themselves and to demand their rights. They need to be able to participate in decisions that affect their lives, and they need to have a say in the future of their communities.
- Providing humanitarian assistance. Refugees often have the skills and experience to provide humanitarian assistance to other refugees. They can help to distribute food, water, and other essential supplies. They can also provide medical care and psychological support.
- Building sustainable livelihoods. Refugees need to be able to support themselves and their families. They need to be able to find work, and they need to have access to education and training. By building sustainable livelihoods, refugees can help to reduce their dependence on aid and to become self-sufficient.

- Promoting peace. Refugees can help to promote peace by building bridges between different communities. They can help to break down stereotypes and to promote understanding. They can also help to build trust and reconciliation.

Refugees' Roles in Peacebuilding

Refugees can play a vital role in peacebuilding by:

- Helping to rebuild communities. Refugees can help to rebuild communities by working to repair homes, schools, and other infrastructure. They can also help to restart businesses and to create jobs.
- Promoting reconciliation. Refugees can help to promote reconciliation by sharing their stories and by working to build bridges between different communities. They can help to break down stereotypes and to promote understanding.
- Preventing future conflicts. Refugees can help to prevent future conflicts by working to address the root causes of displacement. They can help to promote peace education and to build early warning systems.

Refugees are not just victims. They are also agents of change. They have the skills, knowledge, and experience to help resolve displacement and build peace in their communities. We need to support refugees and to help them to reach their full potential.
